

Table of Contents

Table of Contents	2
Table of Figures	4
Acknowledgements	5
Abstract	6
Introduction	7
Background to my research and formulating the research question	8
Using ICT as a form of communicative action	14
The need to identify my standards of judgement	15
My claim to knowledge	16
A living form of theorising	17
The significance of my research	19
My contribution to the knowledge base of educational enquiry	21
Forms of the thesis	21
Chapter 1 – Background to the research: What is my concern?	24
Introduction	24
My history and culture make me while I make my history and culture	25
Conceptual frameworks of my study	29
The framework of political action	35
The framework of communicative action	42
Control and power	49
Generative transformation and the ‘New Science’	51
Forms of the thesis	54
A living theory of learning	58
Summary	61
Chapter 2 – Contexts: Why am I concerned?	63
Introduction	63
The nature of and reasons for my concerns	65
Concerns about practice – whole class teaching	69
Concerns about practice – keys as symbolic control	70
Concerns about the social order – democracy	71
Concerns in relation to educational theory	74
Concerns about method – technical rationality	76
Concerns about my capacity to act	78
Summary	80
Chapter 3 – Taking stock prior to taking political action: What could I do about it?	82
Can my history and culture provide me with a model to develop a new history and culture?	82
Could a change of subjects provide a change of approach?	85

NCVA – could changing the model of practice provide a more life-affirming approach to administering certification?	90
Do the ways I prefer working suggest how I could bring my practice into line with my values?.....	92
Are there ways that I can ‘thicken’ democracy?.....	93
The changing nature of scientific processes	94
Can I develop my own living theory of learning?	96
Purposes of the research.....	96
In search of a methodology.....	99
Summary	103
Chapter 4 – Reconceptualising ICT	105
The evangelistic view of technology	109
The sceptics’ view of technology.....	112
Reconceptualising ICT.....	120
World Wrestling Entertainment and Communicative Action.....	126
Chapter 5 – Taking political action: What I did.....	129
Introduction.....	129
Project 1: First faltering steps – Self-instructional notes and self-directed learning .	132
Project 2: North/South schools link	136
Project 3: The Setanta Project.....	140
Project 4: Action Learning and interconnecting branching networks.....	155
Project 5: Supporting teacher education through LCA and political action	161
Theorising my practice in the light of the five projects	172
Chapter 6 – Issues of validity and exercising my educational influence	176
Issues of validity	176
Transforming my values into living critical standards of judgement	179
Offering my practice to public scrutiny	183
Chapter 7 – The significance of the research	196
The significance of my research for the two main project institutions	196
The significance of my research for policy in ICT	198
The significance of my research for forms of representation	200
The significance of my research for new forms of theory	201
The significance of my research for the education of social formations	202
Contribution to the knowledge base of education.....	204
Conclusion	208
My claim to know	211
Forms of theory and forms of representation.....	212
Bibliography.....	215
Appendix A.....	237
Appendix B	238
Appendix C	239

Table of Figures

Fig 1.1– Homepage of the multimedia thesis at www.ictaspoliticalaction.com	56
Fig 1.2 – Image representing the website www.ictaspoliticalaction.com and therefore representing the thesis. 19 September 2007.....	57
Fig 1.3 – The visual which would represent the action is a three dimensional spiral of spirals (McNiff 1988: 45)	59
Fig 1.4 – Fractals from the Mandelbrot set generated using Fractint v. 18.21 (http://spanky.triumf.ca/www/FRACTint/fractint.html)	60
Fig 5.1 – Eight rungs on the ladder of citizen participation (Arnstein 1969: 220)	134
Fig 5.2 – Students and teachers engaging in a dialogical process of preparing questions to ask the two prime ministers.	138
Fig 5.3 – Sonya Kinch (Art teacher, St Aidan’s), Deirdre Pentony and Marie Mooney (Computer Applications students, Dublin City University) collaborating on the development of VAM (Virtual Art Museum).....	145
Fig 5.4 – First stage of infrastructural development	147
Fig 5.5 – Schedule of training	148
Fig 5.6 – David Hesnan (Setanta Art intranet developer) teaches Art History to a senior class in collaboration with Sonya Kinch (Art teacher), May 2000.....	151
Fig 5.7 – Second phase of infrastructure development	152
Fig 5.8 – Development of intranet	153
Fig 6.1 – A series of photographs showing young learners engaging community leaders and accounting for their practice.....	187
Fig 6.2 Resurrection River, Southern Alaska. Photo by Marli Millar. © www.earthscienceworld.org	191